

Tuesday, November 20 2007

Fight Time

We at UJ spend a lot of time arguing about tunes.

French radio stations, random demos, 80s ballads and obscure beats (Addie!); you name it, we play it. And argue about it in the process. Dominating the AirPort Express is a serious office sport here.

We've also decided that trying to get the music right is getting quite expensive. Typing + answering the phone + trying to download = buying the same crap CD twice. You can see how this is stressing us.

But as we believe in outsourcing everything in life, we plan on starting a serious relationship with Audio Sushi.

Set up by a veteran in the music industry (Jeffrey has seemingly played everywhere), Audio Sushi organise your music for you. They get to know your taste, sift through the beats out there, and put together your own personal playlist. They also do parties (very well), or can just create the playlist for your party, which is handy.

And the best part is, they can keep you up-to-date with the latest tracks that suit your taste.

So no more tragic Monday morning soundtracks? Guess we're going to have to find something else to argue about.

To kick off the festive season, Audio Sushi are giving away five of their PartyPods (valued at £250). Tell us 'why you need to be musically saved' to enter. Put Sushi in subject line to competition@urbanjunkies.com